a term used in the titles of several Scientology churches. From the late 1960s through the mid-1970s, the highest ecclesiastical organizations of Scientology were located at sea aboard a flotilla of ships. The 350-foot vessel Apollo served as the home of L. Ron Hubbard. Because of this, it was then the most senior Scientology church, known as the “flagship” of the flotilla and called “Flag” for short. In the mid-1970s, several of these organizations moved to land bases, but they kept the word “Flag” in their titles.

French Guiana a French overseas department (administrative district) in northeast South America on the Atlantic Ocean.

an area located on the northeast coast of South America, administratively owned by France. First explored and settled by Spaniards around 1500, it was acquired by the French in the late 1600s. French Guiana became known for its penal colony, established in the mid-1800s, which consisted of several islands and certain parts of the mainland, collectively known as Devil's Island. The name also referred to a very small, rocky island that originally housed the prison's lepers and was later a maximum security area. More than 70,000 convicts, including political prisoners, habitual criminals and felons, were deported from France to the penal colony between 1852 and the late 1930s. The penal colony was noted for its dreadful conditions, harsh punishment and the undernourishment of those assigned to hard labor. Due to many deaths from the unhealthy climate and few escapes, Devil's Island in French Guiana became known as a place from which no one returned. The French government ceased sending prisoners to the penal colony in 1938 and it was closed in 1946.

French revolt reference to the French Revolution (1789-1799) which overthrew Louis XVI, the royal family and the aristocratic class and system of privileges they enjoyed. The revolution was in part a protest against France's absolute monarchy, entrenched and unproductive nobility and the consequent lack of freedom for the middle classes. The revolution began after an attempt by Louis XVI to raise taxes to reduce the national debt. After a rioting rabble destroyed the royal prison (the Bastille), the king and family fled only to be captured, tried in court and publicly beheaded. Under the infamous revolutionary leader Robespierre and other radicals, the Reign of Terror (1793-1794) was initiated, during which 300,000 people were arrested and 17,000 were beheaded under the guillotine (many of whom were carried to their death through the streets in two-wheeled carts called tumbrels). Later, even, Robespierre was beheaded when a new ruling body took control of the revolution. The internal chaos, corruption and disorganized incompetence ended with the ascent of Napoleon Bonaparte in 1799, the official end of the French Revolution.

Emil Klaus Fuchs (1911–1988) German-born physicist and spy who was arrested and convicted in 1950 for giving vital American and British atomic research secrets to the Soviet Union. Fuchs studied physics and mathematics at universities in Germany and joined the German Communist Party in 1930. In 1933 when the Nazis came to power in Germany, he fled to Great Britain to continue research and study on the atomic bomb. In 1943, he was sent to the United States to work on the atomic bomb project at Los Alamos, New Mexico, where he acquired a thorough Sentenced to fourteen years in prison, Fuchs was released after nine (in 1959) and went to East Germany (then a communist country), where he was granted citizenship, received several honors and remained a committed communist.

Fuller brushes	brushes produced and sold by the Fuller Brush Company, a well-known American company founded by Alfred Fuller (1885–1973) in the early 1900s. After working in a brush manufacturing company and successfully selling their brushes door-to-door, Fuller decided to make his own brushes to fulfill the needs of his customers. He began making brushes in the basement of his sister's house in 1906 and then sold them door-to-door to his already known customers. Fuller became very successful at selling his brushes, using lines such as "I'll step in," as opposed to asking for permission, and concentrating on showing what his brushes could do rather than talking about them. In doing this, he scrubbed babies' backs, cleaned milk bottles, swept stairs, dusted floors, etc., to show how good his brushes were. About a year later, he founded the Fuller Brush Company and began making brushes of all designs. His business greatly expanded and in just seventeen years of beginning his company's annual sales had reached $15,000,000. By 1922 the Fuller Brush salesmen numbered in the thousands and became known as the "Fuller Brush Men," an army of door-to-door salesmen trained on a special sales patter to sell Fuller brushes.

Galileo Galilei (1564-1642), Italian scientist and astronomer, born in Pisa, Italy, who was a pioneer of modern physics (the science that deals with matter, energy, motion and force) and the first to use a telescope to study the stars and planets. His observations and findings validated an earlier formulated theory by the scientist Copernicus, which stated that the Earth, as well as the other planets, rotated around the sun and that the Earth is not the center of the universe. So I looked into this chapter on binoculars, and it's just page after page after page about binoculars. It's very interesting because it takes it up from the days of Galileo.

Galileo Galilei (1564–1642), Italian physicist, scientist and astronomer. Observing stars and planets with telescopes of his own construction, Galileo's findings agreed with an earlier theory that the sun is the center of the solar system and the earth itself is rotating. The Catholic Church condemned this theory as heresy (as the Bible was seen as supporting the view of a stationary earth) and warned Galileo not to advocate it. However, in 1632, he published a book which discussed the condemned theory and was arrested and forced to renounce his findings before a vast assembly. (Legend has it that after this public declaration, Galileo stamped on the ground and said "Yet it moves!") He was sentenced to life imprisonment; however, this was mitigated to strict seclusion in his villa near Florence, Italy, where he spent his remaining years.

When fired, it automatically ejected the used cartridge and loaded a fresh bullet; thus it could fire a new round as fast as one could pull the trigger. The Garand was a powerful gun of sturdy design, could hold eight rounds of ammunition and had a caliber of .30 of an inch (7.6 mm). (Caliber refers to the inside diameter of the gun barrel.) He further accuses her of stealing items, including his own, and hiding them. By working out how to make the gaslights in her rooms dim and flicker and by pretending she is the only one who a doctrine and system developed by Polish-American scholar and scientist, Alfred Korzybski (1879–1950), which attempted to solve the problems associated with the meaning and communication of words and their effect on human behavior and relations. It is the study of language as a representation of reality. For example, one of Korzybski's main views was that no matter how much one says about some thing, event or quality one cannot describe or define its actual reality with words as one cannot see everything about it or know everything about it. He suggested various "remedies" to improve this situation such as making notations under certain words such as Smith1920 and Smith1935 to distinguish when in time someone is being referred to, thus making the language more precise.

ghost dancers members of an American Indian religious movement in the western United States, called Ghost Dance. The religion, based on the belief that the white man would disappear and dead ancestors and buffalo would return to life, centered on the ghost dance. North American Indians of the southwestern United States and California, who, during the latter half of the nineteenth century, engaged in religious dances (ghost dances) in the hope of invoking a return of their former lands and prosperity.

n. members of an American Indian religious movement in the western United States, called Ghost Dance. The religion first appeared in 1869, died down and again appeared in 1889 when an Indian named Wovoka (ca. 1856–1932) had a vision and began telling what he had seen. Regarded as a messiah, he told the Indians that the white man would disappear and that dead ancestors and game animals (namely buffalo which had been wiped out by the white man), would return to life. The religion spread rapidly to nearly all tribes across the Great Plains. Indians forced onto reservations and afflicted with hunger and disease adopted the religion, which represented hope for the return of traditional ways and rehabilitation of their culture. It centered around what was called a ghost dance where Indians would dance and chant to prepare for the new age. The dancers wore special shirts, called ghost shirts, decorated with sacred symbols, such as stars, eagles and moons, and which they believed would protect them from enemy bullets. White officials on the Indian reservations regarded the Ghost Dance as a threat to their authority and decided to arrest the Sioux chief, Sitting Bull, a famous Indian thought to be the focus of the religious movement among the tribes. Sitting Bull's resistance to arrest ended in his fatal shooting. Not long after this incident, further struggle culminated in the massacre of around nearly 200 Indians by US soldiers, following which popularity of the religion declined.

Unscrupulous in her behavior, Scarlett uses and discards men in her effort to win her true love, Ashley, and to rebuild her family estate. She meets her match, however, when gambler and gunrunner Rhett Butler appears. Knowing Scarlett is as ruthless as himself, Butler is immediately attracted to her. After being widowed for the second time she finally marries him, but still openly pursues Ashley. Towards the end of the story she finally realizes her efforts to win Ashley have been futile and turns to Rhett, but it is too late. Rhett, tired of the constant rejection and humiliation, leaves her. At the end of the film she vows to get Rhett back. The motion picture won eleven Academy Awards, held the record for gross earnings for more than twenty years and is considered one of the greatest motion pictures of all time.

the great slowdown in the American economy, the worst in the country's history, which began with an enormous decrease in the price of stocks on the stock exchange in October 1929, and lasted through the 1930s. Classification means that there are certain actions required to be done or conditions to be attained before an individual is classified for a particular training level and allowed to progress up. Gradation means a gradual grade up, just as there are grades to a road or there are grades to steps. Awareness refers to one's own awareness, which improves as one progresses up. On the right side of this chart there are various auditing steps called the states of Release. The left-hand side of the chart describes the very important steps of training on which one gains the knowledge and abilities necessary to deliver the Grades of Release to another. Greenwich hour angle	n. a reference to a system for determining the position of a vessel at sea by determining its relationship to a heavenly body and Greenwich, England. In order to locate things on the surface of the globe, the earth is divided into 360 equal sections by vertical lines called meridians. These meridians are numbered in degrees, starting from Greenwich, England (which is 0), and increasing in number as one travels westward (i.e., 1 degree, 2 degrees, 3 degrees, etc.). Using these meridians, one can measure the angle in degrees of any heavenly body in relation to Greenwich. Further, it has been observed that heavenly bodies moving westward in the sky (due to the earth's rotation), travel at a rate of 15 degrees per hour (360 degrees in 24 hours). Thus the term Greenwich hour angle, as the two (hour and angle) are related because in navigation the calculations can be given in "time" or "degrees." To determine the position of a vessel at sea, one first takes an exact reading of the angle of a heavenly body (say the sun) in relation to the ship and notes the exact time of day where one is. One then looks in a navigation table to find what meridian the sun is located over at that time of day in Greenwich. By knowing where Greenwich is (0 meridian) and by knowing where the sun is in relation to Greenwich and by knowing where the ship is in relation to the sun, one can determine the position of the vessel.

Over his total experience the preclear has become accustomed to having or identifying himself with considerable mass, both in the form of physical universe matter and in the form of energy masses such as facsimiles. They extended their power further across eastern Anatolia and into Syria and became the chief cultural force in western Asia from 1400 to 1200 B.C. Following this, several invading forces split the Hittite kingdom into small independent states and these subsequently collapsed under the force of another conquering invasion.

Husan and Husain were both killed in battle fighting for the Muslim religion. hobson-jobsoned corrupted or altered (used in reference to words or expressions). To hobson-jobson is to take a word or phrase in one language and modify it to be similar in sound or structure to the general pattern of another language. A hobson-jobson is a word or phrase formed in this manner. For example, the Spanish word cucaracha has become cockroach in English and the English term riding coat has become redingote in French. "Hobson-Jobson" is itself an example of this and comes from "O Hasan, O Husain!" a customary cry of mourning for Hasan and Husain, the grandsons of the Muslim prophet Mohammed. (A Muslim is a follower of the religion Islam. Islam means "submission to the will of God." Muslims worship Allah-the Arabic name for God-the same God of the Jews and Christians. The fundamental belief of Islam is there is only one God and Mohammed is his prophet. [Mohammed is the founder of Islam, born in Mecca circa 570--632, capital city of Saudi Arabia, and is believed by Muslims to be the last prophet of God]). Muslims follow the teachings of a sacred book called the Koran, and believe that the teachings in the Koran are God's words as revealed to Mohammed by God. Hasan and Husain were both killed in battle fighting for the Muslim religion. In the late 1800s, British troops who were stationed in India heard these words being cried out by Indian natives and they altered it over to "Hobson-Jobson" in English. He was presented with a large horn and was told that a good drinker could empty the horn in one go, though most men take two, and the most puny drinker could do it in three. Thor took a long, deep drink without taking a breath; but when he set the horn down and looked inside, the liquid hadn't diminished. He took another long drink, and then a third. To his shame, the level of liquid was only slightly lower and thus he failed in this contest. Later, the king of the giants admitted to Thor that he had deceived him. The tip of the drinking horn had been placed in the ocean and Thor's great gulps had, to the king's amazement, actually lowered the level of the sea.

Opposing Freud's basic theory (that an individual's behavior is influenced by unconscious impulses, drives and instincts originating in childhood and thus shaping the person into adulthood), she believed that a primary condition for later problems in life was that a child feels ``isolated and helpless in a potentially hostile world" and the various strategies a child adopts to cope with this anxiety can eventually become persistent and lead to personality disorders. She also believed that a person's personality is influenced by social conditions and the environment, and emphasized this point in her books. Index of Forbidden Books a list of books considered dangerous to Roman Catholic faith and morals, first published by the Roman Catholic Church in 496 A.D. It was titled Index Librorum Prohibitorum (Index of Forbidden Books) in 1559. The penalty assigned to Catholics for possessing, reading or selling any of the books appearing in this index was excommunication. This was based on the principle that Catholics should be forbidden, as a natural part of ethics, to read anything they know may endanger their faith or moral life. The last edition of the index appeared in 1948 and in 1966 the church announced that no new editions would be published and the existing list was no longer binding. The penalty of excommunication was also lifted and the index was relegated to the status of a historic document.

Kelvin of the Kelvin scale, the standard temperature scale in scientific work proposed by English physicist William Thomson, 1st Baron, Kelvin (1824 - 1907). A degree on the Kelvin scale is the same size as a degree on the Celsius scale, but the Kelvin scale starts at absolute zero instead of at the freezing point of water. Kelvin Fathometer a reference to a Fathometer, a trademark for a device developed in the early 1900s which is used on ships to measure the depth of the water beneath the hull to avoid shallow areas or detect underwater objects. It works by sending a sound from the bottom of the ship to the ocean floor and measuring the time it takes for the sound’s echo to return to the ship. Knowing how long it takes for sound to travel in water, one can calculate how deep the bottom is. Kelvin refers to Irish physicist Lord Kelvin (1824–1907) who invented an earlier device for detecting a water’s depth, in 1872, consisting of a weighted wire attached to a drum on the deck of a ship. Fathometer comes from fathom, a measurement of depth, and meter, an instrument for measuring.

John (Jack) F. Kennedy (1917–1963) American politician of Irish descent, who in 1961 at the age of 43, became the youngest man, and the first Roman Catholic, to become president of the United States. During his term in office he brought the US out of the Cuban missile crisis—in 1962, the Soviet Union installed missiles in Cuba and Kennedy blockaded the area until an agreement was reached and the missiles were removed. Additionally, he negotiated a nuclear test ban treaty with the Soviet Union and Britain and was responsible for a disastrous attempt to invade Cuba after its takeover by a communist regime. He also supported the civil rights movement and space exploration— with the first American-manned space flights carried out during his administration. On Nov. 22, 1963 while on a goodwill trip in Dallas, Texas, Kennedy was assassinated and was succeeded by vice president, Lyndon B. Johnson (1908–1973).

KGB abbreviation for KOMITET GOSUDARSTVENNOY BEZOPASNOSTI (Russian for "Committee for State Security"), the former Soviet Union's secret police, espionage and security agency. Established in 1954, the KGB was successor to a series of state security agencies, the first of which began in 1917. The KGB controlled the intelligence operations within and without the Soviet Union. It had a vast network of employees whose responsibilities were domestic as well as international and included covert intelligence operations (such as the secret collecting of information and the spreading of false information for such purposes as destroying a country's reputation, etc.), the protection of Soviet political leaders, border patrol (to keep intruders out and citizens in), as well as the utilization of a large network of secret informers within the Soviet Union itself. These informers, controlled by KGB officers, pervaded all levels of society including the armed forces as well as the general populace. Their principle function was surveillance of the population to ensure political loyalty and they reported to administration offices located in every major town. People found to be anti-Soviet by KGB agents were interrogated and those deemed as security risks were incarcerated in prisons, forced labor camps or psychiatric hospitals run by the KGB. The KGB

n. a reference to a torture device (iron boot) formerly used for extorting confessions from prisoners. The device consisted of a long iron “boot” in which a prisoner’s foot was inserted. Wedges were then driven between the leg and the boot, serving to crush the leg and shatter the bones. The lead boot was once a common form of torture used in Scotland, as well as in Ireland and France.

An arsenal is an area where weapons and ammunition are made and stored. When the Lee-Enfield rifle was being designed by Lee, he used some of the specifications and technical standards which were already in use at the Enfield arsenal and for this reason the arsenal's name was included in the name of the rifle. In 1904, Great Britain adopted the rifle as the standard issue for its troops and it was used by them during World War I and II. Though considered less accurate than some of its contemporary competitors, the Lee-Enfield was favored by the British for the large number of bullets it could be loaded with and the fact that it could be fired repeatedly and rapidly. lend-lease the transfer of goods and services from one country to another country to aid in a common cause (such as the winning of a war), with payment to be made later by a return of similar goods or services. Lend means someone giving another temporary use of something on the condition that the same or some equivalent be returned. Lease means a contract whereby one gives real estate, equipment or facilities to another for a specific length of time and for a specific amount, at which point it is returned. Lend-lease was developed by the United States early in World War II (1939--1945) to aid its allies who were fighting Germany. By 1941, Germany had invaded France and controlled it and most of Western Europe. England, standing alone against Germany, was in great danger of invasion by them. In response, the United States government initiated the Lend-Lease Act (1941), which gave the president the power to transfer weapons, food or equipment to any nation whose fighting aided the defense of the United States. England received immediate help, and eventually America loaned billions of dollars worth of supplies and services to its allies during World War II. Some aid was returned, such as England furnishing goods and services to US troops, but no specific terms were set up at the end of World War II for the repayment of lend-lease loans. Although lend-lease as a war measure was terminated in 1945, the same concepts and procedures have been used in subsequent foreign-aid policies. They are not able to organize themselves into a proper democratic civilization no matter how many lend-lease payments are thrust into the paws of their greedy politicians.

Listerine a trademark for an antiseptic mouthwash that appeared in the 1800s and which was first used as a disinfectant in surgical procedures. It was named after English surgeon Joseph Lister (1827–1912) who discovered that bacteria was the cause of infection after surgery and who performed the first ever antiseptic surgery in 1865. Listerine was used in the medical field as a multipurpose antiseptic. It was also found to kill germs commonly found in the mouth, as those that cause bad breath, plaque and inflammation of the gums and thus its sales extended into the dental field as an oral antiseptic.

- locker, shot in the the remainder or reserve of money or supplies; a remaining chance; a last resource. This expression comes from warships of the seventeenth to nineteenth centuries, where shot (projectiles for discharge from a cannon or firearm) used to be stored in strong, locked containers called shot lockers. A shot in the locker literally meant that there was one shot of ammunition still left in the shot locker. This expression then came to be used ashore by sailors to mean one still had some money in his pocket or, conversely, not a shot in the locker meaning that he had no money in his pocket. A shot in the locker was later used more generally to refer to a remnant or reserve of anything.

(Locomotor means pertaining to or affecting locomotion, the power of moving from place to place. Ataxia is loss of coordination of the muscles, especially of the extremities.) One of the first manifestations of this disease is shooting pains in the legs; this is followed by loss of certain reflexes and worsening muscular coordination causing a spasmodic, uneven walk. Victims eventually become unable to sense pain and may lose all feeling in the arms and legs, as well as sensibility to temperature. If untreated, the disease usually makes it impossible for a person to walk without assistance and causes severe debilitation.

Man from Mud (theory) a reference to a theory that man arose from mud. Per this theory, it is alleged that chemicals formed in mud and through certain combinations and accidental patterns a primitive single cell was formed. Purportedly, from this combination of cells, man was eventually formed.

Man of the Year since 1928, a person chosen each year to illustrate the cover of the first January edition of Time, an American newsmagazine. Time was founded in 1923 and developed a practice of singling out a newsworthy man each week to place on the magazine's cover. Choosing a "Man of the Year" is said to have started because the news in the first week of January 1928 was so dull that no one individual was deemed noteworthy enough to feature. The gimmick of "Man of the Year" was thus created to handle the lack of news and American aviator Charles Lindbergh (1902–1974) was chosen. The "Man of the Year" was thereafter made an annual event. Those featured were not picked based on a popularity poll but rather on the basis of who did the most in the previous year to affect the news.

Mata Hari	stage name of Margaretha Geertruida MacLeod (1876–1917), a Dutch dancer and courtesan who began to dance professionally in 1905 in Paris, France. Tall, attractive, superficially acquainted with East Indian dance, and willing to appear practically nude in public, she became popular in Paris and Europe. Throughout her life, Mata Hari had numerous lovers, many of whom were military officers. During the First World War (1914–1918), she became connected with a German spy network, accepting money to spy for them, while at the same time agreeing to spy for the French. Although the facts regarding her alleged espionage activities are vague, French intelligence discovered her dealings with the Germans. She was consequently arrested in Paris in 1917, interrogated and tried by a military court in secret. The evidence brought against her was indecisive and she maintained that, though she accepted money from the Germans, she never actually spied for them. However, she was convicted and put to death as a German spy. After her execution, the story of Mata Hari magnified and her name has since come to mean a beautiful and seductive female spy, as well as a double-dealing woman. McGuffey's Readers an illustrated series of books compiled chiefly by William Holmes McGuffey (1800--1873), an American educator and clergyman. The books were designed to teach reading, spelling and moral values to children in each of the first six years of school (called elementary school in the US). They were so popular that nearly all American schoolchildren used them during the 1800s, and they sold approximately 122 million copies. The beginning books taught the alphabet and spelling; the later books included excerpts from great works of literature and history such as Shakespeare. The books reflected McGuffey's view that proper education of the young required their introduction to a wide variety of topics and practical subjects. murder outed	something was suddenly disclosed or a mystery was solved; the misdeed was made known, usually applied to one of a serious nature. This is a coined variation of the saying murder will out, meaning the crime of murder is so horrible that, no matter how hard someone attempts to hide it, in the end it will always become known. The word out in this case is used as a verb and means to become public; to become apparent or revealed.

In 1952, Tighe was the subject of an amateur hypnotist named Morey Bernstein. After giving a factual account of very early this-lifetime incidents, Tighe was directed to go prior to birth this lifetime. At this point she began to relate detailed descriptions of people, places and things associated with a previous life identity known as Bridey Murphy, born December 20, 1798, as the only daughter of Kathleen and Duncan Murphy, living in a small town near Cork, Ireland. She used terms that were correct for the time and place, and thus gave support to the validity of this identity. In the eleven months following she was put through six hypnotic sessions. Each session was recorded and in early 1956 a book detailing these was published. Entitled The Search for Bridey Murphy, the book instantly became a bestseller with more than 170,000 copies in print. The story sparked a craze of reincarnation parties, magazine articles, songs about Bridey Murphy, and even a movie.

Napoleon Bonaparte (1769@1821), Emperor of the French (1804@ 1814 and 1815). He rose to power in France by military force, declared himself emperor, and conducted campaigns of conquest across Europe. By 1812, most of Europe was under Napoleon's control. At this point, however, he attempted to invade Russia, in violation of a treaty he had made with them earlier. The invasion was a failure which drained Napoleon's resources and ended in defeat. The other countries he had been holding in check rose up against him, and Napoleon abdicated in April 1814. He was exiled to the Italian island of Elba, but escaped in March 1815 and reestablished himself, with the help of supporters in France, as emperor. The other European countries again allied against him, and Napoleon was decisively defeated in June of 1815. He was sent into permanent exile on the island of Saint Helena, off the west coast of Africa. In 1821, still exiled at Saint Helena, Napoleon died of cancer.

narcissism n. excessive self-love or admiration; love of self to the exclusion of others. This term originates from the Greek legend of Narcissus.

(psychoanalysis) arrest at or regression to a supposed stage of development in which the self is an object of erotic pleasure.

Narcissus2 in Greek mythology, a handsome youth (the son of the river god named Cephissus) whom many women fell in love with but who rejected their love. One of the women who fell in love with Narcissus was a nature goddess named Echo. Echo had earlier been cursed so that she could not speak except to repeat what was said to her and thus was unable to tell Narcissus of her love for him. Then one day when Narcissus was walking in the woods, Echo approached him with outstretched arms, but Narcissus cruelly refused her love. She was so humiliated that she hid in a cave and wasted away until only her voice remained. To punish Narcissus for what he had done, another goddess named Nemesis (a goddess of divine retribution) made Narcissus fall deeply in love with his own face as seen in a pool of water. Fascinated with his own reflection, Narcissus was unable to remove himself from his image and wasted away, and where his body had lain grew a beautiful flower that now bears his name. From this legend comes the term narcissism which means excessive self-love or admiration; love of self to the exclusion of others.

It commonly refers to a place in the popular play Peter Pan, written in 1904 by Scottish playwright J.M. Barrie (1860--1937), which is the home of Peter Pan, the main character of the story. He is the hero from Never-Never Land, a place where children never grow up and where there are Indians, a wicked pirate named Captain Hook and Peter Pan's friends, including Tinker Bell (a small, flying fairy) and the Lost Boys (those who have been lost by their nurses and not claimed within seven days and thus end up in Never-Never Land where they do not age). In the story, Peter (who can fly) travels to London and becomes friends with three children Wendy, Michael and John. He then flies them to Never-Never Land, where they encounter various adventures. Now, you're in a never-never land that has never been explored.

New Year's resolutions	the plans traditionally made by individuals on the first day of the year, New Year's, which is celebrated as a holiday in almost every country. The earliest of the ancient nations celebrated this day. In ancient Rome, the first day of the year was given over to honoring Janus, the god of gates and doors, of beginnings and endings. The month of January was named after this god. Janus had two faces and looked both ahead and backward. On the first day of the year the Roman people looked back to what had happened during the past year and thought of what the coming year might bring. The early English took over many of the Roman New Year customs. Later the English followed the custom of cleaning chimneys on New Year's Day which was supposed to bring good luck to the household the coming year. That tradition has changed through Nile, battle of the	a battle fought by English naval admiral, Horatio Nelson, in the late 1700s while England was at war with France. The French military leader, Napoleon Bonaparte (1769 - 1821) had been victorious on land and began to gather his fleet together for a naval battle with England. Nelson was sent to watch the French ships at Toulon, a seaport in southeastern France. A storm came up and under its cover the French fleet escaped. Nelson followed it in a long pursuit and finally cornered the French fleet in the Bay of Abukir in northern Egypt, where he attacked and almost destroyed it on 1 August 1798. This engagement cut off Napoleon's army in Egypt and ruined his Egyptian campaign. He was forced to desert his army in Egypt and had to sneak across the Mediterranean in a tiny ship. This victory made Nelson world-famous. He was made Baron of the Nile and given a large sum of money. See also Nelson in this glossary.

During that time, an attack was launched on the tradition of Aristotelian logic which supplied alternative materials on the subject of logic and continued into the mid-1900s.

The first stretch consists of two end-to-end suspension bridges (a bridge with a roadway suspended from cables supported by structures at each end but which has no supporting structures under the length of the bridge itself) going from San Francisco to Yerba Buena Island in the middle of the bay. oil crisis a shortage of oil occurring in the United States and certain European countries beginning in the early 1970s. This shortage was caused mainly by restrictions placed on oil trade by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). This organization regulates the amount of oil produced by its member countries (mostly from the Middle East), and sets the prices for export of this oil. The restrictions were intended to punish the United States and some of its allies for supporting Israel in a conflict the Arabs had with the Israelis in 1973. This situation caused panic in oil companies, consumers and some governments, with a severe shortage of gasoline occurring in the US as well as extremely inflated prices for the import of oil. The crisis continued at varying levels through the 1970s, and by 1980 oil prices were 10 times those of 1973. By the early 1990s, however, prices had reduced to a level comparable with the 1973 prices.

a situation beginning in 1973, where oil and gasoline prices were caused to escalate rapidly, bringing about a rise in energy costs and prices of other raw materials. The stated cause of the oil price increases was a shortage of oil from Arab nations. However, oil companies reported an increase of 80 percent in profits in 1974 over 1973.

ostrich egg, lay an	a variation and intensification of lay an egg, meaning to make a mistake, to fail or blunder, to perform badly. The phrase lay an egg originated in the 1800s in Britain from the game of cricket. When a player failed to score he was said to have "achieved a duck's egg," meaning he achieved nothing. This was an allusion to the similarity between a duck's egg and the figure zero (0). In America the term became goose egg, and eventually the bird was generally left off. The use of the word ostrich here intensifies the size of the mistake or blunder as an ostrich egg averages 5 inches (12.5 cm) in diameter, 6 inches (15 cm) in length, weighs up to 3 pounds (1,35 kg), and is the world's largest egg.

Poe was one of the first writers to emphasize the short story as a distinct literary form. He is also considered the father of the modern detective story. His character C. Auguste Dupin, a French private detective, became the model for many later fictional detectives. "The Raven," his best-known poem and one of the most famous works in American literature, expresses the narrator's grief over the loss of an ideal love—a theme which occurs throughout Poe's works. In his essays and reviews, Poe often theorized about the art of writing and discussed such themes as the nature of beauty and how to write short stories and poems. For example, "The Philosophy of Composition" discusses the process of writing poetry. The most weird dissertation I ever read in my life, I think, is by Edgar Allan Poe on the subject and it's used in every textbook, I think, in short story writing I have ever collided with, and I think it's Poe writing about how you write. —A Review of Study (22 Sept. 64)

(1809–1849) American poet, short-story writer and critic. Poe has been widely recognized as one of the greatest American writers. His most popular tales are filled with an atmosphere of the strange and bizarre. For example, the short story "The Premature Burial" pretends to be a true account of many people buried alive, and "Descent into the Maelstrom" is a short story about a fisherman who lived to tell the story of his boat's descent into a hell-like whirlpool (maelstrom). Poe was one of the first writers to emphasize the short story as a distinct literary form. He is also considered the father of the modern detective story. His character C. pot short for potentiometer, a type of variable resistor (a device used to vary the amount of resistance in the path of electrical flow). A potentiometer can be used to increase or decrease the pressure (voltage) behind a flow of electrical energy and to change the volume of the flow. - priming pan a small pan, located on the top of a firearm, which was part of the firing mechanism of an old-fashioned flintlock gun, from the early 1600s until the middle of the 1800s. When the trigger was pulled, the hammer moved by a spring action down towards a steel bar and when the flint struck the bar, sparks would shower into the pan which held a small supply of priming powder. The resulting flash would ignite the main charge of gunpowder contained in the barrel, by moving through a vent into the barrel, and thus fire the bullet. PTS Type A one who is intimately connected with persons (such as marital or familial ties) of known antagonism to mental or spiritual treatment or Scientology. In practice such persons, even when they approach Scientology in a friendly fashion, have such pressure continually brought to bear upon them by persons with undue influence over them that they make very poor gains in processing, and their interest is solely devoted to proving the antagonistic element wrong. They, by experience, produce a great deal of trouble in the long run as their own condition does not improve adequately under such stresses to effectively combat the antagonism.
